Producer

Jan Pettersen, right, is master of production and ageing of fine, unblended, untreated sherries. Made from the finest wines, these range from the pale, light and elegant Finos to the unique Antique sherries and have received numerous international awards. The brandies are made using only alambic distillates of selected white wines: primarily aged in new French and American oak and subsequently for long periods in sherry ageing barrels. Only the highest categories of brandy are made and it is rare to find such exceptional sherries and brandies made under one roof. With the increasing popularity of sherries throughout Europe and the States, as an aperitif and accompanying food, it is something that should be found in the cellar of every top restaurant.

Tasting Notes

Very serious and austere Sherry with the classic greenish amber tint, typical of aged Amontillados of a rich golden colour. A real tang on the nose and palate with orange peel, eucalyptus, varnished wood, fennel and a myriad of other flavours and sensations on a background of stark dryness and tense acidity defeated by the overwhelming complexities – a really sublime wine. "Colour: Amber iodinated. Nose: Pungent and aromatic. Mouth: Almond elegant sensations. Envelope and dry. Long finish retronasal."

Winemaking

Aged oxidatively post fortification to 16%
